

Dr. Leah Nettle

Dr. Leah Nettle earned her Phd. in Biology from SUNY Binghamton University focusing on behavior, ecology and evolution. She studied the vocal communication of American Crows during breeding and feeding situations, deciphering the contexts and functions of two crow calls. Prior to Binghamton University, Dr. Nettle worked in a companion animal veterinary clinic as a veterinary assistant.

Since 2014, she has worked with and learned from Dr. Amy Marder, CAAB, a leading expert in the fields of animal shelter and companion animal behavior, attending to a variety of cat and dog behavior problems at appointments in the clients homes and in the Lexington office.

In her free time, Dr. Nettle loves yoga, cooking, hiking and spending time with her husband, dog and two cats.
